

Percent Commuting Alone

WASHINGTON STATE

- More than 80 percent of Washington commuters commuted alone. The lowest share – about three-quarters – was in the East Balance. The other extreme was Clark County, where nearly 88 percent commuted alone.
- King County's high share of "alone commuters" may be due to a relatively low percent of van commuters and a high percent of car commuters.

About the State Population Survey

The Washington State Population Survey was conducted in the spring of 1998 to provide social, demographic, and economic information about Washington residents that would otherwise not be available between the 1990 and 2000 federal census years.

Responses to the survey were obtained from telephone interviews of 7,279 households that represent the state population as a whole. The survey was designed by the Office of Financial Management and conducted by the Washington State University Social and Economic Sciences Research Center.

Data from the survey, as well as a background report titled, 1998 Washington State Population Survey Data Report, are available electronically at <http://www.wa.gov/ofm/> under Population/Data, or by calling the Office of Financial Management at (360) 902-0599.
